

HISTORIC QUINCY ILLINOIS

CITY OF REFUGE

1835-1865

Self-guided driving tour of the Historic City on the Bay

Twenty significant sites and the compelling stories surrounding Quincy's prominent role in history as a place of refuge

BLACK HISTORY   LATTER-DAY SAINTS
POTAWATOMI SHELTER   GERMAN HERITAGE

QUINCY'S FIRST THREE DECADES
TIMELINES + STORIES

20-POINT DRIVING TOUR MAP

+ NEW PHILADELPHIA NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE

intro / index / timeline

The pioneer city of Quincy, Illinois was founded in 1825 and would quickly become a refuge for sojourners in crisis.

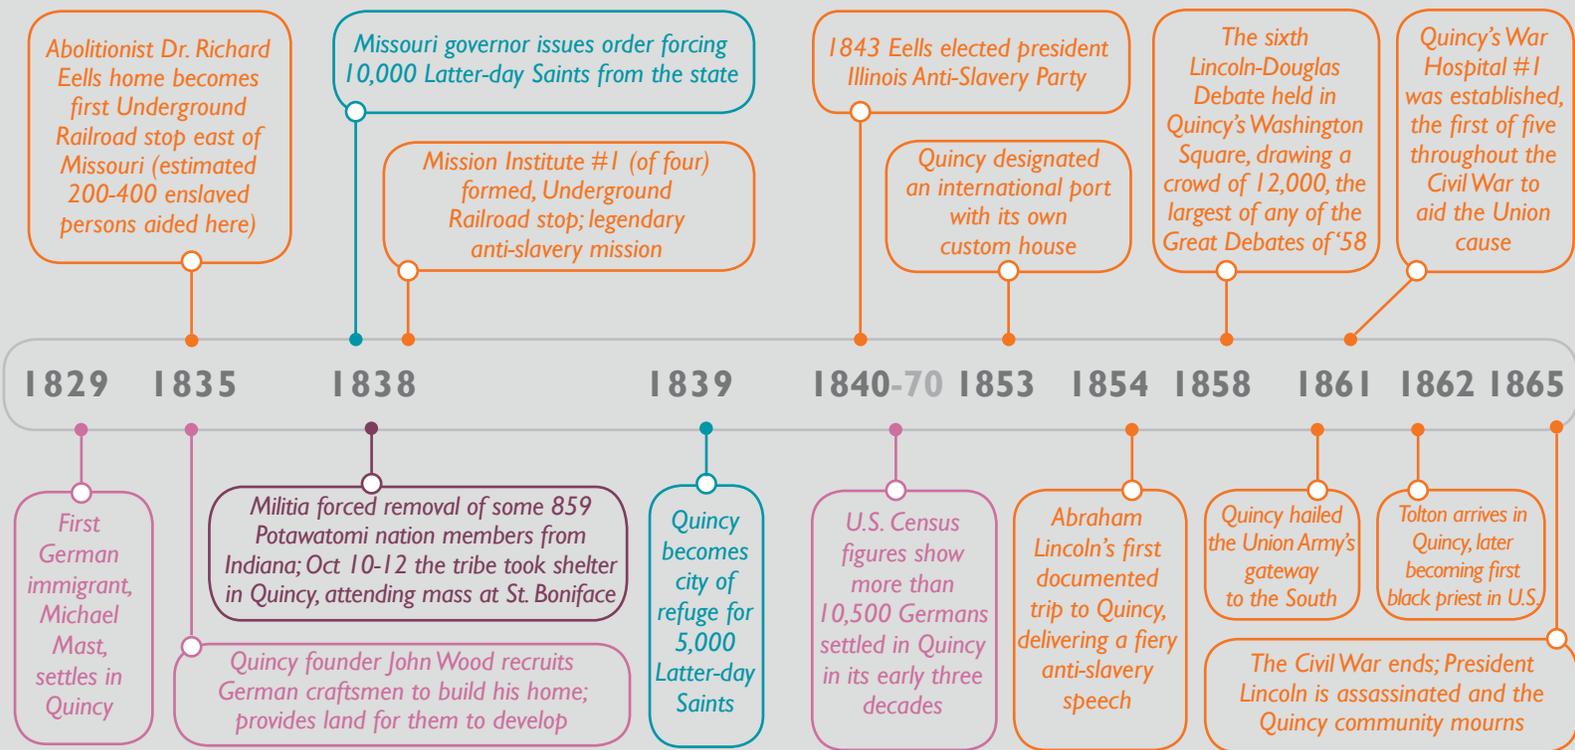

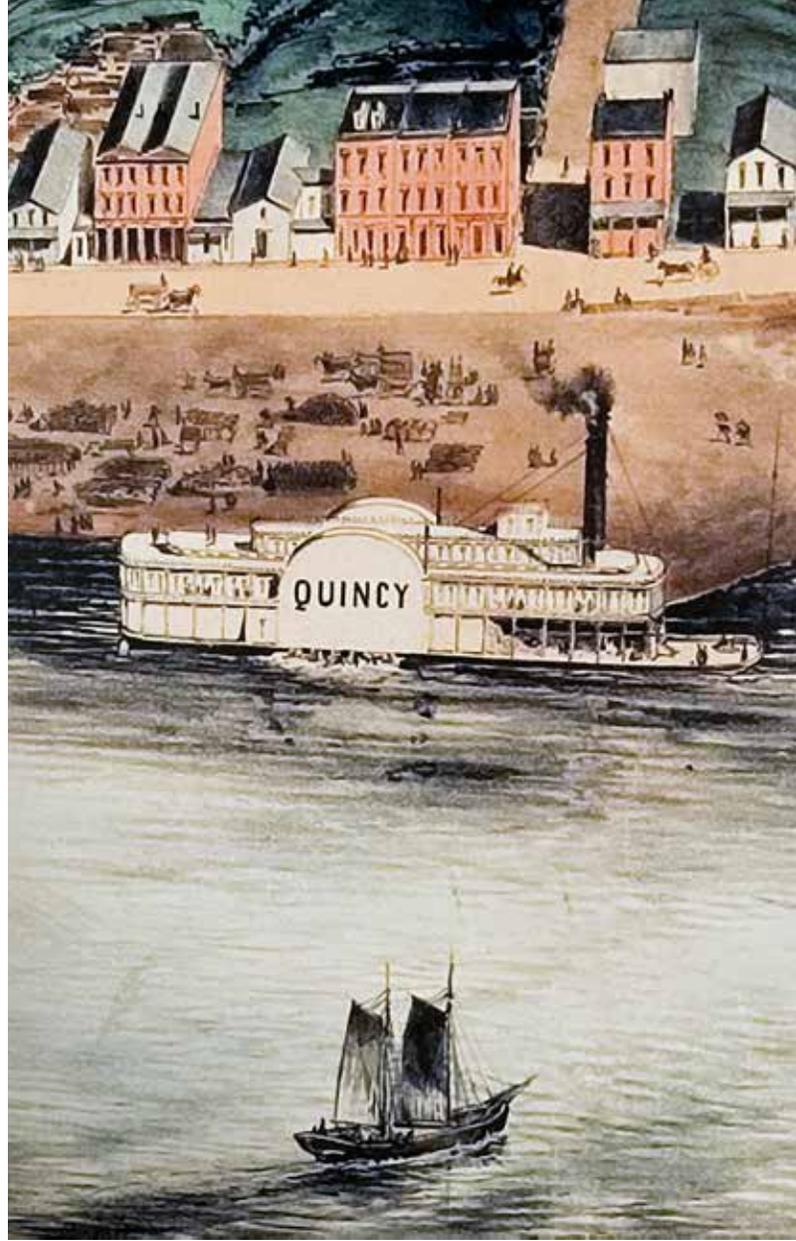

Situated at the western-most point of Illinois on the banks of the Mississippi River, Quincy was founded by John Wood, who regularly demonstrated humanitarian ideals of equality and compassion. Wood was not alone in his quest to build a strong and welcoming city. The community at large opened its gates to those in need, implementing action and generous care to many and diverse groups.

The City of Refuge Guide explores Quincy's impactful role during its first three decades.

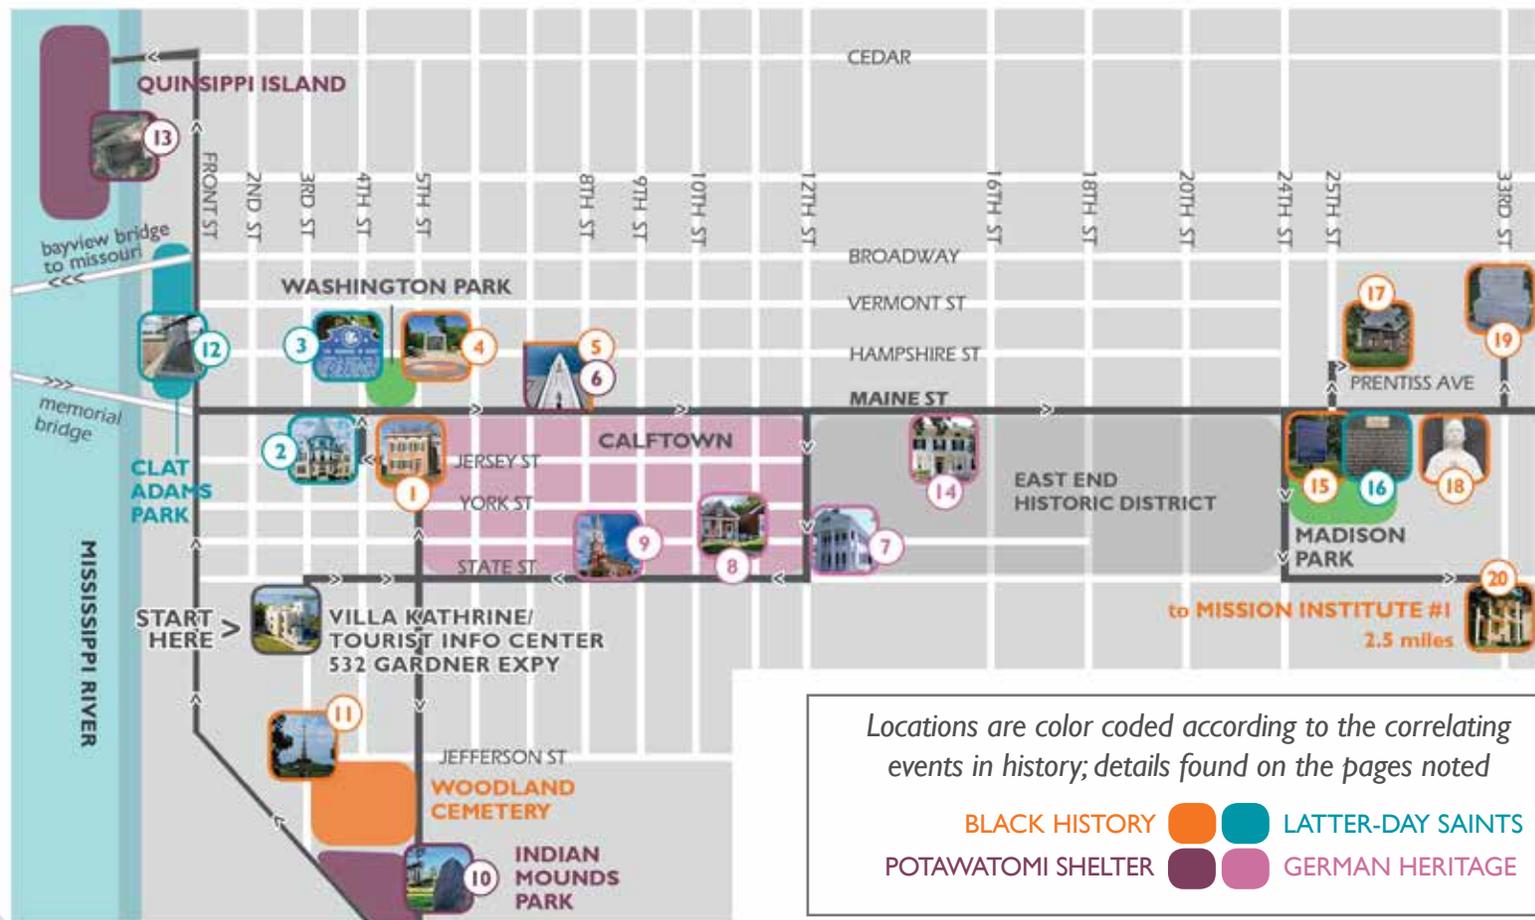

[guide is color coded by groups/stories; timeline of highlights below]

- P 1 MAP
- P 3 UNDERGROUND RAILROAD: Eells House
- P 5 UNDERGROUND RAILROAD: Mission Institute
- P 7 ANTI-SLAVERY: Lincoln Era
- P 9 AMERICA'S FIRST BLACK PRIEST: Augustine Tolton
- P 11 LATTER-DAY SAINTS REFUGE
- P 13 POTAWATOMI INDIAN SHELTER + SACRED GROUNDS
- P 15 GERMAN HERITAGE

- BLACK HISTORY ●
- LATTER-DAY SAINTS ●
- POTAWATOMI SHELTER ●
- GERMAN SETTLEMENT ●

20-point map / self-guided driving tour

Locations are color coded according to the correlating events in history; details found on the pages noted

● BLACK HISTORY ● LATTER-DAY SAINTS
● POTAWATOMI SHELTER ● GERMAN HERITAGE

- 1 DR. RICHARD EELLS HOUSE 415 JERSEY
The first Underground Railroad stop east of Missouri [p. 4]
- 2 THE HISTORY MUSEUM ON THE SQUARE 332 MAINE
Latter-day Saints City of Refuge exhibition room [p. 12]
- 3 WASHINGTON PARK 4TH & MAINE
5,000 Latter-day Saints received here in 1838 [p. 12]
- 4 LINCOLN-DOUGLAS DEBATE SITE WASHINGTON PARK 5TH & MAINE [p. 8] + INTERPRETIVE CENTER, 128 N 5TH
- 5 ST BONIFACE CHURCH 117 N 7TH
Fr Tolton ordination marker; first black priest in America [p. 10]
- 6 ST BONIFACE CHURCH 117 N 7TH
Mass site attended by the Potawatomi Indians in 1838 [p. 14]
- 7 GOV. JOHN WOOD MANSION 425 S 12TH
Masterpiece built by German craftsmen for Quincy's founder [p. 16]
- 8 TRAPP ROW 303-321 S 10TH
"Shotgun cottages" home to German settlers in Calftown [p. 16]
- 9 SALEM EVANGELICAL CHURCH 437 S 9TH
Primarily built for its neighboring German congregation [p. 16]
- 10 INDIAN MOUNDS PARK 1500 S 5TH
Sacred Native-American grounds dating to 200 BCE [p. 13]
- 11 WOODLAND CEMETERY 1020 S 5TH
Civil War hospital site with significant monuments [p. 8]
- 12 CLAT ADAMS PARK 501 ALL AMERICAN PARK
Crossing point of Latter-day Saints to IL; winter of 1839 [p. 12]
- 13 QUINSIPPI ISLAND 1100 QUINSIPPI ISLAND RD
Encampment site of Potawatomi Indians in October 1838 [p. 14]
- 14 WOMEN'S CITY CLUB 1550 MAINE
Plaque commemorating pioneer women of Quincy [p. 15]
- 15 MADISON PARK 25TH & MAINE
Commemorative site for Underground Railroad Station #1 [p. 6]
- 16 MADISON PARK 25TH & MAINE
Burial place for Latter-day Saints who died while seeking asylum [p. 12]
- 17 MISSION INSTITUTE #2 253 I PRENTISS AVE (private residence)
Underground Railroad stop established by Dr. David Nelson [p. 6]
- 18 ST PETER CATHOLIC CHURCH 2600 MAINE
Statue & memorial wall dedicated to Father Tolton [p. 10]
- 19 ST PETER CEMETERY 3300 BROADWAY
Gravesite of Father Tolton [p. 10]
- 20 MISSION INSTITUTE #1 593 I STATE ST (private residence)
Underground Railroad location & home of Dr. Nelson [p. 6]

1835-1846

UNDERGROUND RAILROAD Eells House Story

Quincy's role in the Underground Railroad is highlighted in the events that took place at the home of Dr. Richard Eells and his wife, Jane. Eells was an ardent abolitionist from Connecticut who relocated to Quincy to help enslaved people.

In 1835 Richard and Jane Eells built their family home on the Mississippi bluffs four blocks from the river. It is estimated that hundreds of enslaved people channeled through the Eells House.

The most prominent attempted escape began the night a man named Charley was delivered to Eells' back door by Berryman Barnett, who had spotted him swimming across the Mississippi. Barnett was a formerly enslaved man and one of the first known workers of Quincy's Underground Railroad.

Eells could not safely hide Charley in his home so the pair headed east by carriage to the Mission Institute. Encountering a posse along the way, Charley fled across the cemetery (today's Madison Park). He was captured and returned to Missouri. Eells was arrested and charged with harboring and secreting a fugitive slave. He was tried and found guilty by Judge Stephen Douglas, who later gained fame for his political debates with Abraham Lincoln.

In 1844 the Illinois Supreme Court turned down Eells' appeal. Due to the case's notoriety, Eells was elected president of the Illinois Anti-Slavery Party; however, the process of the state appeal had drained him financially and emotionally. Eells died at the age of 46 aboard a steamship on the Ohio River while on a trip east to rest.

The Dr. Eells House is recognized by the U.S. Department of the Interior, National Parks Service, as one of the forty-two most important Underground Railroad sites deserving recognition and support, due to the Eells case reaching the U.S. Supreme Court and to Eells' prominence in the abolitionist movement.

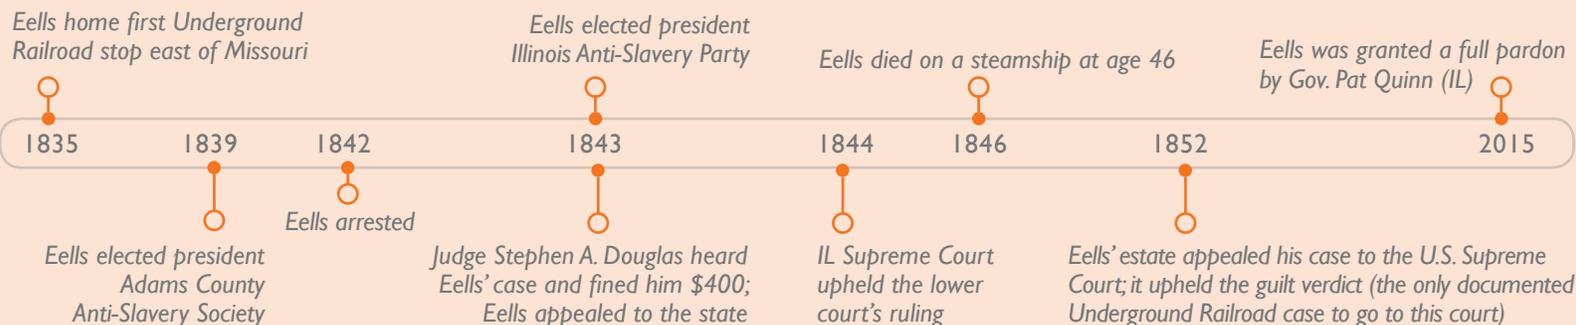

DR. RICHARD EELLS HOUSE | 415 Jersey | 217.223.1800

The first Underground Railroad stop east of Missouri and the oldest surviving 2-story brick home in Quincy. Now a museum dedicated to educational tours about the Underground Railroad.

> Tours : Saturday 1-4p | Apr-Nov or by appointment

STORY WITHIN THE STORY

Richard Eells attended Yale Medical School, where he met and married Jane Bestor (1802-1880). They had two daughters, both of whom died young. Amidst their anti-slavery endeavors in Quincy, Dr. Eells established a medical practice and the couple adopted two children.

1836-1844

UNDERGROUND RAILROAD Mission Institute Story

In 1836, American Antislavery Society (AASS) agent Rev. David Nelson established the Mission Institute. It would become recognized as Quincy's best known Underground Railroad station, Mission Institute #1.

The Institute prepared men, and later women, as missionaries to upset slavery across the river in Northeast Missouri, provoking violent reactions from Missouri slaveholders. Most Quincy founders, many of whom hailed from New England and were motivated by the teachings of the Second Great Awakening, supported the endeavor. The Mission Institute is reknown for its antislavery efforts and Underground Railroad work.

When it became clear that Nelson planned to move his family and his troublesome Marion College to Quincy, the “self-constituted committee of citizens” demanded he return to Missouri. John Wood, Quincy founder and leader, brought 30 armed men to confront the mob at Brown’s hotel. If they were going to take Nelson, Wood warned, they would have “to take him over our dead bodies.” Wood’s determination broke up the crowd. Nelson went on to form four institutes:

- #1 61st & Broadway: chapel & 20 log cabins on 80 acres located near the Nelson home at 60th & State (Oakland, the Nelson home, was built with a hiding place for fugitive slaves)
- #2 24th & Maine for two blocks east and north: two-story brick school & 20-30 cabins on 11 acres
- #3 Undetermined; thought to be closer to Payson, IL
- #4 Six miles south of Quincy near Turtle Lake

MADISON PARK
25TH & MAINE

part of MISSION INSTITUTE #2
2531 PRENTISS AVE private residence today

MISSION INSTITUTE #1
DR. DAVID NELSON HOME
5931 STATE ST private residence

Local author, Ruth Deters, resided in the former Nelson home for 75 years. Upon learning of the home’s significance, she set about extensive research, and at the age of 81, published “The Underground Railroad Ran Through My House!” Her work documents over 32 Underground Railroad sites, only a few of which remain standing today.

Deter’s book is available for purchase at SeeQuincy.com, Amazon.com and the Villa Kathrine, 532 Gardner Expressway.

{Ruth Deters: Dec 27, 1927 - Mar 22, 2021}

STORY WITHIN THE STORY

In 1842 a pro-slavery mob from Marion County, MO crossed the frozen Mississippi River to Quincy during the night and burned the buildings of the Mission Institute at 24th & Maine. Undeterred, Dr. Nelson and his supporters rebuilt them and continued abolitionist activities. Enslaved persons continued to cross the river and make their way to Quincy.

1853-1865

ANTI-SLAVERY IN QUINCY The Lincoln Era

By the 1850s the United States had become radically divided by specific regional identities. The South supported slavery, while the North opposed the expansion of slavery into western territories. In 1853 Quincy was designated an international port with its own custom house. Its population had migrated from both Southern and Northern states, an influx of German and Irish immigrants, and a small community of African-Americans. This diversity led to strong, differing emotions regarding the expansion of slavery.

In 1854, the Kansas-Nebraska Act reversed long-standing compromises by providing that each new state of the Union would decide its posture on slavery. In that same year, Abraham Lincoln made his first documented trip to Quincy to address opposition of the bill on behalf of the Congressional candidacy of Archibald Williams, a fellow attorney and comrade of Lincoln's. Sharing Archie's political philosophy, Lincoln delivered an impassioned speech attacking the immorality of slavery.

An exhausted but determined Lincoln would return to Quincy four years later for the sixth of the Great Debates of 1858, arguing slavery issues with his opponent, Stephen A. Douglas. "Who shall say, I am the superior, and you are the inferior?" he posed before the crowd of 12,000 attendees. Lincoln lost the senatorial race against Douglas, but was victorious two years later for the Presidency in 1860.

The Civil War effectively ended on April 9, 1865. Confederate General Lee surrendered, the Confederacy collapsed, and four million enslaved African-Americans were freed. The war-torn nation then entered the Reconstruction Era in a partially successful attempt to rebuild the country and grant civil rights to formerly enslaved people.

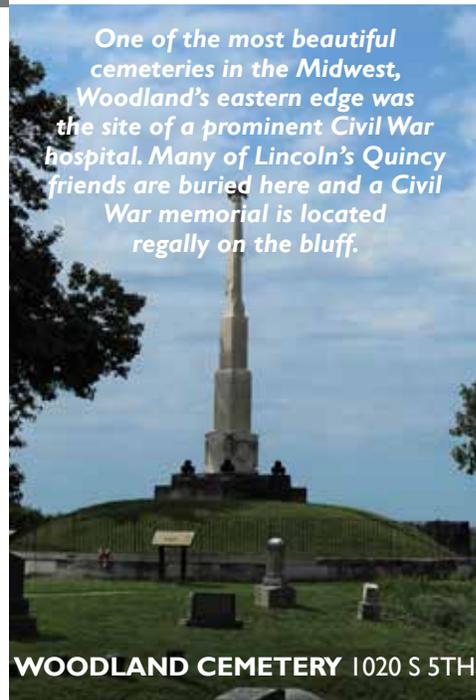

On April 15, 1865, the United States suffered a devastating loss with the assassination of President Lincoln. Locally, the news was first delivered to former Governor and Quincy's founder, John Wood. From there, word spread to the Quincy community.

QUINCY'S CIVIL WAR HOSPITALS 1861-1865

During his 1858 visit, Lincoln envisioned Quincy as a transportation hub. Within three years, Quincy was the Union Army's gateway to the South. Thousands of the President's troops boarded trains and riverboats on their way to battle, and many returned for care in Quincy's five military hospitals.

Four months after the start of the war, Quincy opened the first of five hospitals. The Needle Pickets and the Good Samaritans, local womens' organizations dedicated to the Union cause and war relief, supported the hospitals and sent provisions to the troops. The number of soldiers ministered to ranked in the thousands. By 1864, The Quincy Whig reported "We are glad to learn that Quincy is to be made the general rendezvous for all the sick, wounded and disabled soldiers of our State."

One of the most beautiful cemeteries in the Midwest, Woodland's eastern edge was the site of a prominent Civil War hospital. Many of Lincoln's Quincy friends are buried here and a Civil War memorial is located regally on the bluff.

WOODLAND CEMETERY 1020 S 5TH

WASHINGTON PARK 5TH & MAINE

Site of the sixth Lincoln-Douglas Debate, the park features a designated plaza plus six Lincoln Storyboards, part of an 18-point trail.

Across 5th Street is the Lincoln-Douglas Debate Interpretive Center.

Quincy is a Gateway Community of the Abraham Lincoln National Heritage Area.

AMERICA'S FIRST BLACK PRIEST Augustine Tolton

Augustus Tolton was born in Missouri to Peter Paul Tolton and Martha Jane Chisley Tolton, who were enslaved. His mother, who was raised Catholic, named him after an uncle named Augustus. He was baptized Augustine in St. Peter's Catholic Church near Rensselaer, Missouri. After the Civil War broke out, Peter fled to St. Louis hoping to join the Union. In 1862, Martha, unsure of her husband's fate, escaped to Quincy with her children.

Upon arrival in Quincy, 9-year old Augustine attended St. Boniface School intermittently while working at Harris Tobacco Factory. His family attended the 2,000-member church which was predominantly German. Young Gus learned the German language from attending the church before being forced to leave school due to prejudice.

The Toltons transferred to St. Peter Church, where Fr. Peter McGirr welcomed them and took steps to ensure that Augustine would flourish in his parish school. The tenacious learner studied at St. Peter for the next several years splitting his time between school and work. At the age of 16, Augustine received his First Communion at the Church of St. Peter on the Feast of Corpus Christi. He graduated from St. Peter at the age of 18.

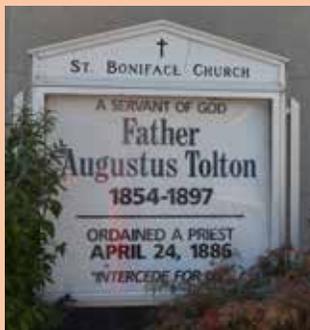

Despite McGirr's support, Tolton was rejected by every American seminary to which he applied. In 1878, Augustine was accepted at St. Francis Solanus College (now Quincy University). Upon graduation he attended the Pontifical Urbaniana University in Rome, where he studied Latin and Greek and became fluent in the Italian language. Tolton was ordained at St. John Lateran Basilica.

Augustine Tolton returned to Quincy as the first black priest in the United States and celebrated his first Solemn High Mass in the community at St. Boniface in 1886. In that same year, he became Pastor of St. Joseph Church in Quincy. After three years of overseeing the church and school, Fr. Tolton was reassigned to Chicago due to extreme opposition from a new priest at St. Boniface. While in Chicago, Tolton led the development and construction of St. Monica's Catholic Church as a black "national parish church."

At the age of 43, Augustine Tolton collapsed as a result of the 1897 heat wave in Chicago and died the following day at Mercy Hospital. After a funeral which included 100 priests, Tolton was buried in the priests' lot in St. Peter's Cemetery in Quincy, which had been his expressed wish.

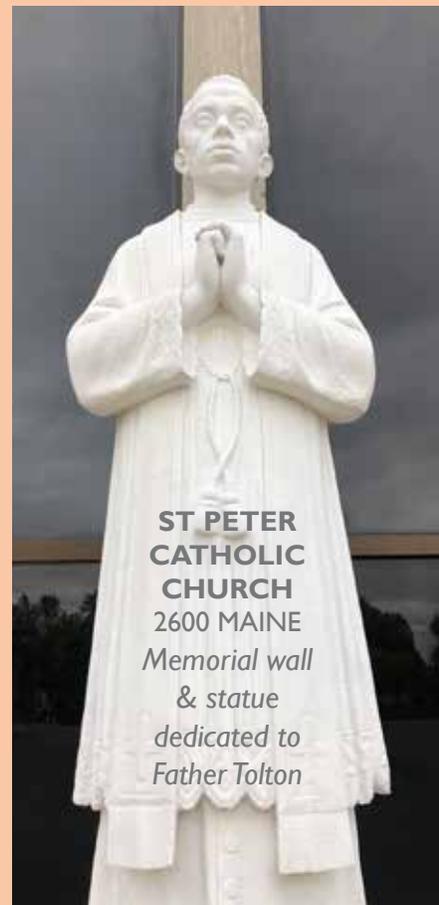

1854-1897

ST BONIFACE CHURCH
117 N 7TH

ST PETER CEMETERY
3300 BROADWAY

ST PETER CATHOLIC CHURCH
2600 MAINE
Memorial wall & statue dedicated to Father Tolton

On June 12, 2019, Pope Francis authorized the promulgation of a "Decree of Heroic Virtue," advancing the cause of Servant of God Augustine Tolton and granting him the title "Venerable." The next steps would lead to recognition of Tolton's sainthood.

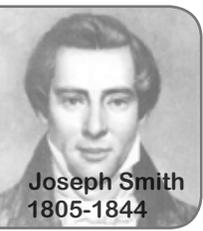

1839-1844

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST Latter-day Saints Refuge

“In our time of deep distress Quincy nobly came forward to our relief and like the good Samaritan, poured oil into our wounds and contributed liberally to our necessities.”
 – Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, Sydney Rigdon

In October of 1838 an order was issued by Missouri Governor Lilburn W. Boggs causing thousands of Latter-day Saints to flee the state and seek refuge in Illinois across the Mississippi River. They were ordered to leave or be killed. By the bitter cold of January 1839, there were hundreds of men, women, and children strung along a 200-mile trail leading east. By February, hundreds of refugees lined the west bank of the Mississippi River.

From across the river, citizens of Quincy saw firsthand the miserable drama of human suffering and desired to offer relief. A committee was formed and the small city of Quincy, numbering fewer than 2,000 people, absorbed more than 5,000 Latter-day Saints, providing shelter, food, clothing and jobs. When local provisions were depleted, pleas for assistance were sent out as far away as Washington, D.C.

Joseph Smith Jr. was an American religious leader and founder of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. At the age of 24, Smith published the Book of Mormon. By the time of his death, 14 years later, he had attracted tens of thousands of followers.

The cry for compassion was led by Quincy’s mayor and founder, John Wood, who also became the 12th Governor of Illinois. It’s recorded that Wood entertained Joseph Smith and his Nauvoo peers over dinner at his home. Statue shown left, located at John Wood Community College, 1301 S 48th.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER & FRONT STREET CLAT ADAMS PARK 501 ALL AMERICAN PARK

Crossing point of the Latter-day Saints from Missouri to Illinois in the winter of 1839.

The wide expanse of the partially frozen river posed difficulties to the Saints seeking shelter in Quincy. The 2002 monument commemorates the 5,000 exiles who found refuge in Adams County.

THE HISTORY MUSEUM ON THE SQUARE 332 MAINE | 217.214.1888

Latter-day Saints City of Refuge display, including the keys to the Rotating exhibits, stained glass gallery and gift shop also onsite.

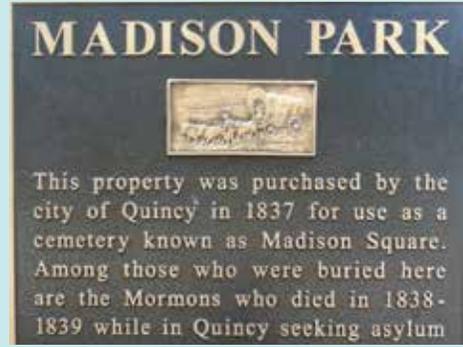

City founder, John Wood overlooks the museum from historic Washington Park, location of a plaque at the site where many refugees camped during the winter of 1839.

Wood was instrumental in welcoming the Saints. > Tues-Sat 10-4 | hsqac.com

MADISON PARK 25TH & MAINE

Among those buried in the former cemetery are Latter-day Saints who died while in Quincy (1838-1839). Many bodies were moved to Woodland Cemetery in 1857.

Missouri governor issued order forcing 10,000 Latter-day Saints to leave the state

Refugees hunkered down on the river shore waiting for it to freeze to traverse the ice to Quincy

Joseph Smith escaped prison in MO and found his way to his family in Quincy

“They burst the chains of slavery and proclaimed us forever free! Quincy, our first noble city of refuge when we came with our garments stained with blood, should not be forgotten” –Joseph Smith

1838 Violence flared in Missouri, hastening the exit of the Latter-day Saints jan-feb 1839 “A large number of families are encamped on the opposite bank of the Mississippi... If they have been thrown upon our shores destitute, common humanity must oblige us to aid and relieve them all in our power” –The Quincy Whig apr-jun 1839 For three brief months, Quincy was headquarters of the Latter-day Saints; Smith and the first wave of Saints moved 50 miles north to Commerce to build a new city that would later be Nauvoo

1844 Joseph Smith traveled to Carthage, IL to stand trial but was killed when an angry mob stormed the jailhouse

POTAWATOMI SHELTER Trail of Death

The Potawatomi Trail of Death refers to the forced removal by militia in 1838 of some 859 members of the Potawatomi nation from Indiana to reservation lands in what is now eastern Kansas.

In 1817, a year after Indiana became a state, an estimated 2,000 Potawatomi Indians settled along the rivers and lakes in northern Indiana. Around the same time, state and federal governments decided to open those lands to settlement and development by European Americans.

In the days preceding the Potawatomi exodus from Indiana, the militia invaded their community, burning their crops and destroying the village, which consisted of approximately 100 structures. The 660-mile journey from Twin Lakes, Indiana, to Osawatomie, Kansas, began on September 4, 1838. During the 61-day pilgrimage, more than 40 Native Americans died, most of them children. It marked the single largest Indian removal in Indiana history.

For three days in the fall of 1838 (October 8-10), the group of over 850, along with 400 horses and 50 wagons, camped near Quincy, where they went on to cross the Mississippi River via steam-powered ferry to Missouri. During this time, three children died. While in Quincy, some Potawatomi attended Mass at St. Boniface Catholic Church.

The Trail of Death was declared a Regional Historic Trail in the mid-1990s by the state legislatures of Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, and Missouri. There are over 80 Trail of Death markers along the route, originally located at campsites set up every 15-20 miles (a day's journey by walking). Two Trail of Death markers are located in Quincy.

PRESERVING SACRED GROUNDS Indian Mounds

At one time the state of Illinois may have had as many as 10,000 mounds. Only about 500 remain, many on private land. One of the best preserved complexes still evident in the Upper Mississippi River Valley lies on the Quincy bluffs in Indian Mounds Park. It encompasses 23 mounds, 37 acres and is adjacent to historic Woodland Cemetery.

The mounds and nearby earthworks date from 200 BCE-1000 CE. A series of timeline panels in the park tell the Native American history of Quincy. The last one commemorates the Trail of Death.

The purposes of some of the mounds are still shrouded in mystery. Some societies buried their dead in mounds with great ceremony, and all had sacred associations.

1

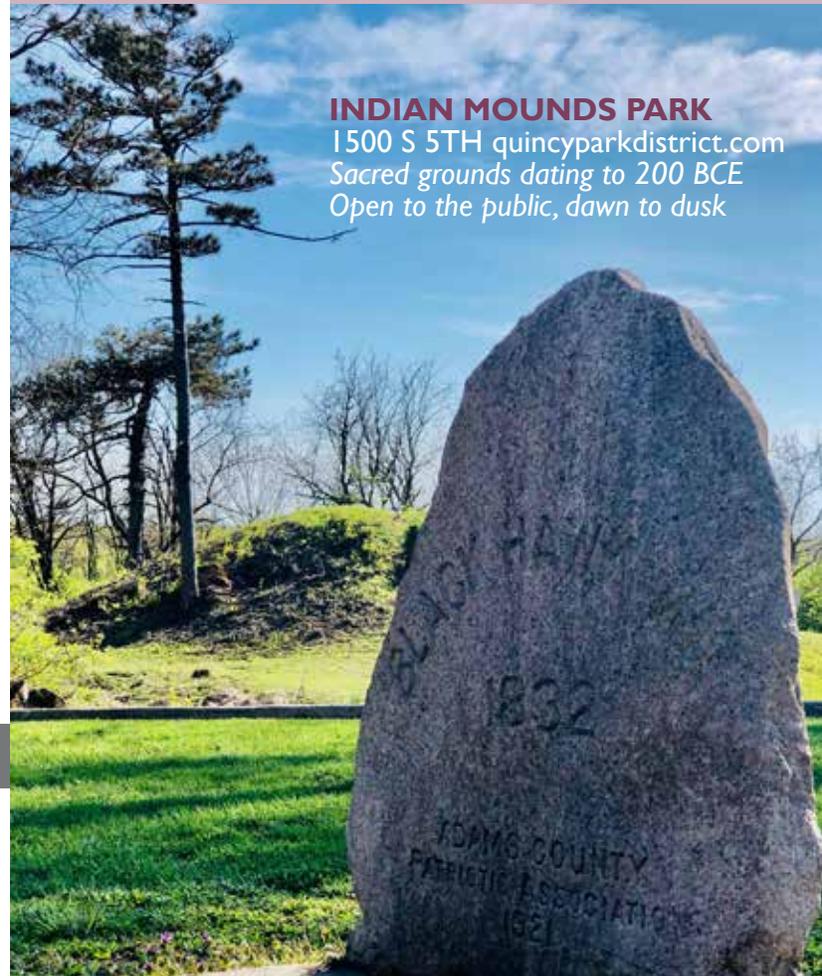

2

ST BONIFACE CHURCH | 17 N 7TH

Bronze plate on front of the church commemorates the site of mass celebrated by the Potawatomi Indians before crossing the Mississippi on their forced march to Kansas

QUINSIPPI ISLAND | 100 QUINSIPPI ISLAND RD

Encampment site of Potawatomi Indians in October 1838

INDIAN MOUNDS PARK

1500 S 5TH quincyparkdistrict.com

Sacred grounds dating to 200 BCE

Open to the public, dawn to dusk

1829-1870

GERMAN IMMIGRATION Quincy Settlement

German settlers migrated to the Quincy area in increasing numbers during the late 1830s, many drawn by the mixed topography with agricultural potential. Others, seeking labor and business opportunities, settled on small city lots on the south side provided by city founder, John Wood. This influenced much of Quincy's historic architecture. Collectively, the South Side German Historic District became known as Caltown, due to the fact that nearly every household possessed a cow.

Starting in the 1840s, migrants fled their birthland to escape revolutions among the German provinces. As Quincy's population exploded from the mass migration, its culture was changed by the new arrivals, who brought enviable skills and alternate styles from their home country.

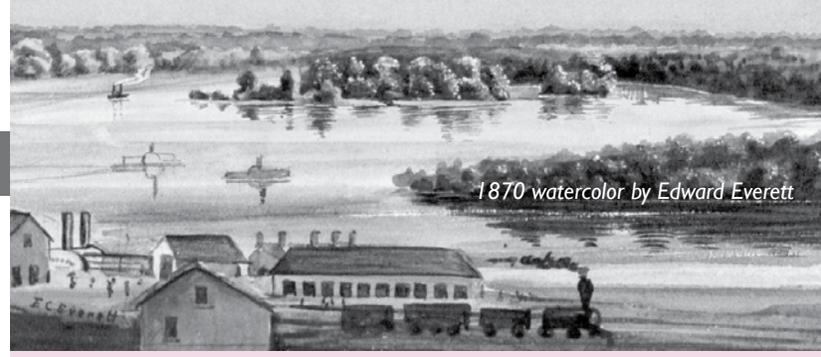

1837-1918

A notable woman of German-American descent from Quincy's Southside was Louise Maertz, educator and American Civil War nurse. Her volunteer war efforts took her to widespread locations and despite contracting malaria in 1863, she successfully continued her humanitarian endeavors. Maertz helped found the New Orleans Soldiers' Home, and a separate men's ward at Quincy Blessing Hospital. She was a founding member of the "Friends in Council," chartered in 1869 and the oldest continuing women's literary club in America [12th & State].

Maertz penned several books, including A New Method for the Study of English Literature, a biography of her father, and a memoir of her time with the Union Army. Late in life she served on the board of the Quincy Historical Society, and in that capacity saved the John Wood Mansion from demolition in 1907. A plaque on the Quincy Women's City Club grounds, honoring "Pioneer Women" of the town, salutes Louise Maertz. Upon her death, her estate funded the establishment of an orphanage for African-American children in Quincy.

1870 watercolor by Edward Everett

The early German immigrants to Quincy faced a long and perilous trip, often taking 60 days. Anton Delabar arrived in 1833 and contributed greatly to the young community. He erected the first sawmill in Quincy, as well as the first brewery (pictured above).

GOV. JOHN WOOD MANSION [c. 1835]
425 S 12TH | 217.214.1835

Quincy's founder, John Wood, recruited German craftsmen to build his Greek Revival masterpiece. He also provided land to German settlers as incentive to settle in Quincy.
> Tues, Wed, Fri 10-2
Sat 10-4 | hsqac.com

SALEM EVANGELICAL CHURCH [c. 1877]
437 S 9TH | 217.222.0601

Primarily built for its neighborhood German congregation, this Victorian Gothic style holds a wide preaching auditorium feature inside.
saalemquincy.org

TRAPP ROW
303-321 S 10TH
[c. 1889]

Small houses referred to as "Shotgun cottages" were built on 30-ft lots in "Caltown."

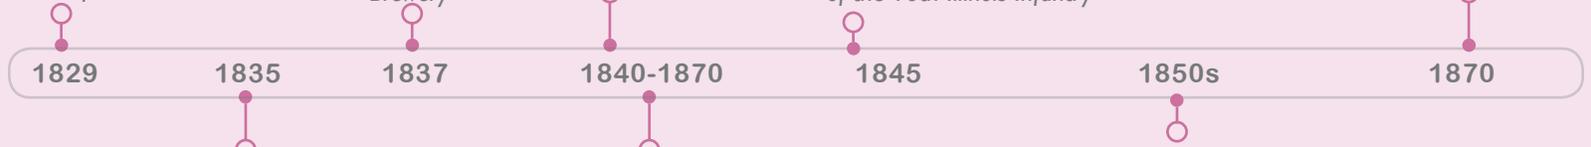

Quincy's first German immigrant arrives: Michael Mast, a tailor & lifelong bachelor who owned five rental houses

Quincy's first brewery est.: Anton Delabar Brewery

Quincy is incorporated; Anton Delabar acted as an election judge

Delabar organized the German military company, the Quincy Jaegers, continuing till the Civil War as the nucleus of Co. N of the 16th Illinois Infantry

43 percent of Quincy's 24,052 population was comprised of people of German ancestry

City founder John Wood begins building his mansion, recruiting skilled German-born craftsmen from St. Louis, MO

U.S. Census figures show more than 10,500 Germans settled in Quincy

The German voting block became an important element; the Quincy Whig quoted "His Whig friends say he's the only man in the district who can carry the 'Dutch' vote. Should John Wood ever remove from Quincy, the 'Dutch' would follow him." [Wood served seven terms as mayor of Quincy]

CITY OF REFUGE ROAD TRIP

New Philadelphia, Illinois a formerly enslaved man's vision for an integrated town

NEW PHILADELPHIA
TOWNSITE
HAS BEEN DESIGNATED A
NATIONAL HISTORIC LANDMARK

1836-1885

Free Frank McWorter was an American born into slavery who bought his own freedom and founded the town of New Philadelphia, Illinois. He was the first African American to found a town and establish a planned community in the United States.

New Philadelphia National Historic Site has been established as the newest national park to commemorate the history of early 19th century pioneers in Illinois (Dec 2022). This milestone will help preserve the site and previously untold stories that tell a more complete history of our country.

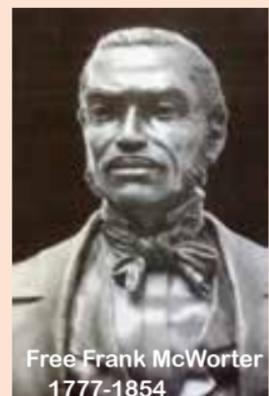

Located near Barry, Illinois, New Philadelphia is the first town known to be officially registered by an African American. Frank McWorter bought his freedom and the freedom of 15 family members by mining for crude niter in Kentucky caves and processing the mined material into saltpeter, by hiring his time to other settlers, and by selling lots in New Philadelphia, the town he founded. The site became a National Historic Landmark in 2009. New Philadelphia National Historic Site is now the 424th park in the National Park System.

The designation of New Philadelphia National Historic Site will help preserve the important stories of Frank McWorter and others, ensuring the sacrifices and legacy will be remembered.

Frank and his wife, Lucy McWorter, are buried in the cemetery outside the original town. The New Philadelphia site and Frank's grave are listed on the National Register of Historic Places. In 2013, the site was included in the National Park Service National Underground Railroad Network to Freedom program, in which visitors receive a stamp.

Artifacts, signage, and an augmented reality walking tour are open to the public > 2150E County Road 2 | Barry, IL

For more information, visit > newphiladelphiail.org
pikelincoln.com + nps.gov

Free Frank McWorter
1777-1854